

All Lao Elephant Camp

The All Lao Elephant Camp is undergoing developments that will improve the center's ability to care for the elephants, and at the same time assisting development of skills in the local communities.

The camp is changing its approach to the way it handles its tourism – and endeavors to improve infrastructure and handling techniques. Part and parcel of this is improved contact and communications with Thai veterinary care centers, who provide medical assistance and advice to the camp regarding the well-being of the elephants. Improvements to the camp's elephant enclosures are also well underway.

The people of Luang Prabang are more aware of the need to care for their environment, and the All Lao Elephant Camp is becoming a means for community development, by providing employment to the local people, as well as proactively educating them about Laos wildlife and the elephants themselves. Officials at the Camp see its future as more conservatory and educational than merely just tourism.
